Introduction

In the United States, respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) causes seasonal epidemics of respiratory illness. Most adult RSV disease cases occur among older adults, with an estimated 60,000–160,000 hospitalizations and 6,000–10,000 deaths annually among adults aged ≥65 years in the United States. Unlike routine and risk-based vaccine recommendations, recommendations based on shared clinical decision-making do not target all persons in a particular age group or an identifiable risk group.

VHA suggests that clinicians may offer a single dose RSV vaccine to adults aged 60 years or older. The decision to receive a RSV vaccine should include patient's preferences and values regarding benefits and harms related to the patient's risk for severe RSV-associated disease and known vaccine harm. Patients should only receive an RSV vaccine if they request vaccination after shared decision-making. VHA's guidance on this Clinical Preventive Service may be found here: REDACTED

CDC recommends a respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) vaccine during pregnancy to protect babies from severe RSV disease: (NOTE: Only Pfizer's RSV vaccine (Abrysvo) has been approved for use during pregnancy). Pregnant Veterans should receive a single dose of Pfizer's bivalent RSVpreF vaccine (Abrysvo) during weeks 32 through 36 of pregnancy during September through January. However, RSV seasons can vary in different parts of the United States. Local, state, and territorial health departments can determine the best times to start and stop administration of RSV vaccines in their jurisdictions. This is especially important in Alaska, parts of Florida, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, U.S. Virgin Islands, Guam, and the U.S.-affiliated Pacific Islands, where RSV seasonality can be different from most of the continental U.S.

GlaxoSmithKline's RSV vaccine, adjuvanted (Arexvy) is NOT FDA approved for pregnant persons.

To facilitate the shared decision-making discussion and capture the interaction with patients, this new template is being deployed as a Shared Template.
